China Sets Up 10-Point Self-Help Recovery Plan

NANKING, Jan. 28—Premier Chiang Kai-shek announced today a 10-point "self-help" program of financial and economic reforms to place the Chinese government on a more stable basis to "secure the maximum benefit" from American aid.

Chun said that the new program will be followed or accompanied by "certain other reforms" in the field of general administration and military reorganization.

Steps will be taken under the program to reduce government expenditures, improve the tax system, check inflation, promote exports and stabilize the monetary system.

Chun said that China now is facing "unprecedented economic difficulties," and added that his government was gratified to learn that the United States intends to provide substantial aid to China.

THE BROAD program outlined by Chun included:

1. Control and readjustment of government expenditures both in Chinese National currency and foreign currencies to realize all practicable economies.
2. Improvement of provincial and local tax systems to increase the yield and place the burden on those "best able to pay."
3. Improvements for civil servants, officers and men accompanied by gradual reduction of government personnel.
4. Strengthening and extension of domestic controls to check inflation.
5. Effect a stabilized monetary system.
6. Banking and credit reform

ONE MAN'S OPINION

There is no dissatisfaction here with the devaluation of the franc. We haven't had opportunity in years to buy 214 anything for one dollar.

But it is a commentary on the times when a dollar will get you 214 more francs than francs.

In Canada there is a movement afoot to devalue the cabbage which has gone off the vegetable standard.

This week roses were $5 a dozen and cabbages were $6 but the fellow who wanted to stand solid with his girl still sent roses.

There are very few girls who wear a corsage of cabbages and look exotic as well as expensive.

Nearly-Frozen County Baby Taken From Heatless Home

Six-month-old Charles Eugene Noggle, son of Mr. and Mrs. Alton Noggle, Lockbourne Route 1, Wednesday was recovering in Children's hospital from severe exposure suffered in Sunday's sub-zero weather in his unheated Pickaway County farm home.

The plight of the 22-year-old father and veteran of World War II, who was working for $1-a-day on the Holbrook farm in Scioto township, came to light Tuesday when the case was reported to Miss Pauline Reese, county relief director, and John Kerns, probation officer.

Prior to this time, Miss Reese said, the case had gone unreported to any relief or welfare agency. Another son, William, 2, also was in the home but did not suffer any visible harm from the freezing temperatures.

A report from Children's hospital revealed Charles' ears were frozen and that the skin had cracked, Miss Reese said. When first found, the infant's body had started to "turn blue" from the cold.

International News Service reported at noon Wednesday that the youngster had spent a "good" night in the hospital.

After an immediate investigation of the home conditions, emergency relief was granted to the young farmer and his family.

GROCERIES and coal were ordered sent to the home and provisions were being made to properly clothe them and make arrangements for baby clothing and pay for hospital medical expenses.

The ex-infantryman is a tenant farmer who gets his home rent free and receives $1-a-day milking cows on the farm, the relief director revealed.

She said the father was doing his best to warm the home for his children by cutting wood and scavenging other fuel to feed two small stoves in the home. However, Miss Reese said the family was without proper clothing, and had very little food for subsistence.

"It's hard to realize conditions like this exist in America," the relief director said, "but it is a typical case."

Probably the only thing that saved the baby was that it was well fed on cow's milk, she pointed out. Had the infant been undernourished to any extent it may not have survived.

Miss Reese said she had many similar cases, especially during the cold weather, where homes are improperly provided for because the parents are out of work or in ill health. This case was outstanding, she said, because the baby may have died.

RELIEF for the Noggle family will be turned over to James Shea, local veterans service officer.

He said the Noggles would be cared for at least until the weather breaks and the father can provide for his home.

French Avert Crisis On Free-Gold Issue

PARIS, Jan. 28—A French cabinet crisis was averted, at least temporarily, by agreement of the national assembly to hold debate today on the government's free-gold trading measure.

Presier Robert Schuman won by a vote of 373 to 184 approval of his demand that the free-gold exchange bill, which is part of the government's new monetary policy, be considered immediately as an urgent question.

The vote by the assembly was taken late last night following a special three-hour cabinet meeting at which it was decided to stake the life of the government on the monetary issue.

Schuman, although committing the future of his cabinet in asking assembly approval of immediate debate, avoided the traditional demand for an outright vote of confidence.

ANY DIRECT confidence demand would have delayed voting on the matter by 24 hours.

Debate will start following a meeting of the Socialist parliamentary group which both Schuman and Foreign Minister Georges Bidault are expected to attend although neither is a member.

They will confer in an apparent effort to stem a Socialist revolt against the monetary policy, which threatens the existence of the government.

The Newspaper L'Orde quoted Socialist Minister of National Education Edmond Naegelen as saying Socialist party executives are planning to meet to decide upon a common attitude "beyond which we will not compromise."

Socialists in the finance commission earlier had joined communists in voting to reject the free-gold bill. But later in the assembly the Socialists linked forces with non-Communist parties to give the government a favorable vote on its request for debate.

The stand to be taken by the Socialists when crucial voting is held apparently will be decided in the pre-assembly conferences.

LE POPULAIRE significantly headlined the whole story as a "Socialist Barrage Against The Economic Policy Of Rene Mayer."

This newspaper pointed out that Franco-British relations appear to be a principal preoccupation of the Socialists who are anxious to avoid endangering present joint economic planning with Britain which strongly objected to the devaluation of the franc.

Democrats Pressing Fight Against Tax Slash Bill

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28—The House Democratic leadership strove today to hold the line against a "break through" in minority ranks that would permit Republicans to marshal a two-thirds' vote for the GOP tax reduction bill.

Democrats were summoned together on the eve of tomorrow's opening debate on the Knutson bill for a closed meeting this afternoon to discuss the Republican measure.

Democratic Leader Rayburn of Texas said no effort would be made to bind members on voting.

House Republicans will assemble immediately after the Democratic meeting to discuss the Knutson bill also. The GOP leadership is anxious to roll up as close to a 100 percent Republican vote as possible for the measure.

The bill sponsored by Rep. Knutson (R) Minn. will be debated tomorrow and Friday, with a final vote due Monday.

DEMOCRATIC leaders feel that while they cannot block passage, if they can prevent a two-thirds' vote for the bill, it will act as an inducement to the senate to modify the legislation.

The question of a two-thirds' vote is paramount in Congress as President Truman has indicated he will veto the Republican bill. A move is already underway in the senate to cut the tax reduction to $4 billion.

Circleville Man Tosses Hat Into Congress Race

A 36-year-old Circleville man, untested in the political wars, Wednesday announced he would seek Democratic nomination for representative to the U. S. Congress in the May primary.

He is Ed Haacker of 166 East High street. His is the first official announcement of a Democratic candidate for Congress. Unofficial reports have said Joseph Allen, New Lexington attorney, was considering tossing his hat into the ring.

Walter J. Brehm, Republican of Logan, is the present officeholder and already has announced he would seek renomination and reelection.

A graduate of Circleville high school, Haacker is now employed as an examiner and auditor in the State Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices in Columbus.

2 More Reds Lose Offices

PARIS, Jan. 28—The French national assembly continued its purge of Communists from official posts today by ousting two Communist party members from two parliamentary commissions on chairmanships.

Marcel Cachin, dean of Communist deputies, was removed from the presidency of the foreign affairs commission, in favor of Moderate Deputy Edouard Bonnafe.

A few moments later agricultural commission rejected reelection of Communist Waldeck Rochet as its president.

Tired Of Wait, Man Files Suit

CANTON, Jan. 28—Lester D. Lowe of Massillon finally got tired of waiting.

In 1941 he turned over his car to a Canton auto dealer with the understanding, he said, that he would receive $426.02 for the car as trade-in value on a new car.

The dealer later sold the car, according to Lowe, and returned $300. Lowe still hasn't got his new car.

He filed suit in Stark County common pleas court yesterday to recover the rest of the money.

BELIEVING that one good turn deserves another, Capt. Konstantin Flink, Los Angeles, sends a food package to Helmut Witte, former Nazi submarine commander. In 1942, when Flink's ship, the U. Sing Sing Nips Racket

Guard Is Accused Of Taking 'Fees'

OSSINING, N. Y., Jan. 28—Sing Sing prison was threatened today with a bribery-gambling scandal following the arrest of Herbert Vincent Bosquet, 40, veteran prison guard.

New York state police said Bosquet operated a letter-writing racket on a "service charge" basis for inmates who use most of the cash received to buy "special favors," bribe guards and gamble inside the prison.

Bosquet waived examination on a felony charge and was released on $5,000 bail pending action by the Westchester county grand jury.

State police arrested Bosquet after an intensive two-months investigation.

Bosquet is accused of taking "hundreds of dollars" in "fees" for soliciting relatives of prisoners for cash.

STATE POLICE said Bosquet had been operating the letter racket for more than a year.

Sing Sing rules permit inmates to seek cash contributions from relatives and friends but such letters must be cleared through the warden's office.

Minor Tremor Shakes Panay

MANILA, Jan. 28—A minor new tremor shook Panay island port of Iloilo in the Central Philippines early today in the wake of three days of earth temblors that took at least 21 lives and wrought widespread destruction.

Iloilo's populace participated in open-air public prayers while the city's houses of worship lay in ruins. Officiating at a special mass, Bishop Jesus Maria Cuenca declared:

"Let us pray that the Almighty God have pity on us. Let us pray to Him that these quakes may stop—these quakes that may yet completely ruin the whole island of Panay."

Government relief workers pitched tents in Iloilo's squares and parks to shelter hospital patients and persons rendered homeless.

Reports from Antique province, west of Iloilo, said 80 percent of the houses were destroyed in one town and 50 percent in another.

Weatherman Sees Relief Coming

Pickaway countians Wednesday were seriously entertaining thoughts of asking the powers that be to change the nickname of their state from "Buckeye" to "Polar."

Those thoughts came as the official weather thermometer plunged downward to 18 below zero about dawn Wednesday.

The same reading was registered Sunday and the minus 18 was the lowest official recording here since the 32 below figure of 1912. However, many old-timers recall that their household mercury columns have registered below Wednesday's and Sunday's minus 18.

Later Wednesday, the mercury started climbing and it had reached an official high of 14 above at noon, according to Charles Carter, local observer and watchman of temperatures.

CARTER, who admitted it was too wintery for him, was not above joking about the situation. He cracked wise, declared he was contemplating putting a pop-off valve on the bottom of his official instrument if the mercury continues plunging downward.

"That mercury must be getting awful cramped down there all in a little batch," he opined. But weathermen in Columbus declared without reservations that the current "cold wave is on its way out" and that conditions "will be pretty mild by Friday."

A break in the prolonged cold was coming none too soon to relieve the pressure on many phases of the state's economy, including a gas shortage which had started a spiral of layoffs in many Ohio industries.

Efforts to conserve dwindling gas supplies were intensified despite the optimistic weather forecast.

The Ohio Fuel Gas Company, which serves more than half of the state, asked the Ohio Public Utilities Commission for an emergency order that would stop all non-essential use of gas by its customers.

The commission almost immediately granted the order which applies to schools, churches, libraries, department stores (Continued on Page Two)

Drys Demanding Spot On State November Ballot

COLUMBUS, Jan. 28—The Prohibition Party today sued for a place on the Ohio ballot in November for its candidates for President, vice-president and United States senator.

The second district appellate court granted an alternative writ of mandamus ordering Secretary of State Edward J. Hummel either to accept the party's candidates for filing or to show cause by Feb. 28 why he should not do so.

The suit was filed by Frank McCartney, Columbus attorney and the party's senatorial candidate. He sued for himself, Presidential Candidate Claude A. Watson of Los Angeles, and Vice-Presidential Candidate Dale H. Learn of Shrodsburg, Pa.

McCartney charged that the new section of Ohio law which apparently blocks his party from the ballot is unconstitutional.

THE SECTION provides a place on the ballot only for presidential and vice-presidential candidates who are selected by the national convention of party delegates elected at the preceding year's convention.

The Soviet personnel have been forced to remain in Santiago despite the fact that Chile severed diplomatic relations with Moscow last Oct. 21.

Believe It Or Not, Ted Lewis Was Born Here Tuesday Night

One of Pickaway County's newest and youngest residents wobbled on spindly legs Wednesday and survived a frigid world through big brown eyes while awaiting the arrival of her first promised article of clothing—a high silk hat.

The newcomer was a dapple gray shetland pony, born Tuesday night at about 9 p. m. at the Fairgrounds to one of the performing ponies of the Mills Bros. Circus which is wintering here.

And the new arrival already is named, despite her sex, in honor of this city's most illustrious natives—Ted Lewis, veteran trapper and orchestra leader. Circus officials promised the new Ted Lewis the trademarks of the old Ted Lewis—a high silk hat and a white carnation.

But they admittedly were having a bit of trouble filling the last half of that order. They were trying to figure out just where a shetland pony could wear the carnation.

GOP Leaders Set Session

Own Marshall Plan To Be Aired

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28—The 20-senator group of Republicans organized to frame a GOP version of the Marshall Plan has scheduled another "parlor" meeting for Friday night.

The second after-dark session of the senate bloc was arranged as responsible foreign aid supporters indicated that $4.5 billion instead of $6.8 billion would be the most Congress is likely to "appropriate" to launch the Marshall Plan.

There was strong talk in senate circles that the remaining $2.3 billion might be provided in the form of contract authorizations instead of immediate cash. This procedure already has been suggested as a possible compromise by Sen. Taft (R) Ohio.

Hearings on the European recovery legislation continued with Ex. Sen. LaFollette of Wisconsin appearing in the senate and a spokesman for the National Association of Manufacturers testifying before house committees.

Stassen Seen Helping Taft

COLUMBUS, Jan. 28—Sen. Robert A. Taft's strategy board agreed today that the entry of former Minnesota Gov. Harold E. Stassen into the Ohio primary served to solidify the Ohio Republican organization.

Stassen has announced that he would try to elect delegates to the GOP national convention in 10 of the state's 22 congressional districts, as well as one delegate-at-large. He would thus be seeking 21 of the state's 53 delegates to the Philadelphia convention next June.

Taft's "big four"—Congressman Clarence J. Brown of Lancaster, chairman of the Taft campaign; Republican State Chairman Fred Johnson, State Treasurer Don H. Brooklyn Cops Levy Wrong Rap

NEW YORK, Jan. 28—Brooklyn's cops will need a substitute for that old catchall, "disorderly conduct" henceforth.

Two of them jailed Clifford F. Strouse, 57, of Brooklyn, accusing him of disorderly conduct because he tipped off vagrants to hide before the cops rounded them up.

There is no dissatisfaction here with the devaluation of the franc. We haven't had opportunity in years to buy 214 anything for one dollar.

But it is a commentary on the times when a dollar will get you 214 more francs than frank-furts.

IN CINCINNATI, Dan McClain, manager of the Ohio Fuel office, cautioned local residents that low pressures were probable here in the next 24 to 36 hours.

He stated that pressure in the company's chief lead-in mains were reaching the minimum. The official cautioned householders to keep close vigil on water heaters and furnaces so that pilots lights would not be extinguished by lowering pressure.

McClain said the state public utilities commission's order excluded public buildings on the grounds that some institutions housed in them might be considered essential. However, warehouses and other such non-essential commercial structures would be cut to the lowest possible minimum.

The spokesman said the situation brought on by continued sub-zero temperatures was so serious that the firm already had drawn up orders instructing home-owners on how to turn off their own gas.

The company representative said mayors, county commissioners, police and sheriff's deputies would be asked to cooperate in spreading the news of the commercial curtailment order.

THE COMMISSION said food and grocery stores would be exempted from the order. It also was expected that most municipal and state government offices would be excluded as most of those serviced by gas would come under the essential heading.

It was colder in Ohio this morning than anywhere in the United States, according to unofficial reports.

Perry County in the south central part of the state led with readings of 32 below at Mt. Perry, 28 at Crooksville, 26 at Corning and 24 below zero at New Lexington. All of the county schools were closed due to the intense cold.

A survey by the state department of highways placed the low range from eight above to 27 below throughout Ohio. The weather bureau's official reports showed 18 below at Zanesville, 12 below at Columbus and Findlay, 10 below at Akron, nine below at Wilmington and eight below at Dayton.

Observers based their forecast of milder weather on a wave of Pacific warm air which has moved into Northwestern Canada. In contrast with Ohio's low temperatures this morning the proverbial North Dakota and Minnesota "ice box" reported readings of only around zero.

A sunny sky over the entire state was assisting in the recovery, but observers said the mercury rise would be slow through today and tonight. They said the low range tonight would be zero to 10 above and that the mercury would climb to a range of 20 to 30 above tomorrow afternoon.

Local Police Arrested 471 During 1947

Police Chief William F. McCrady disclosed Wednesday that he and his men made 471 arrests during 1947.

The charges ranged from intoxication to fighting, and from petty theft to grand larceny.

"Of course," remarked the chief, "we have had our regular visitors. One man was taken into custody nine times during the past year. It's rumored that he even has a key to the jail now, using the jail as a stopping off place on his way home."

The chief has amassed a couple of hundred unpaid tickets given to meter-dodgers and double-parkers in the past year.

"In the near future," the chief said, "many Cincinnati and Pickaway County residents will learn that we are keeping a record of their offenses. We plan to drop them a line or two on a postal card asking them to come and visit us, and if that produces no results, we shall take our business to them."

THE PARKING meter fines in the city have been lax in the past, but now that everyone knows what they look like, and that the little slot was put there to collect coins. We plan to beat down on them a little harder," McCrady declared.

4 More Fever Cases Isolated

Four more Pickaway County youngsters have been placed under quarantine for scarlet fever by Dr. A. D. Blackburn, county health commissioner.

They are: Clyde Longberry, 12, son of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Longberry, Five Points; Marcus Furnas, 13, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Furnas, Derby; Judith Ann Dennis, 6, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Dennis, Monroe township; and Barbara Sue Sparks, 7, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Elyses Sparks, Monroe township.

Bandits Said 'Hopped Up'

AKRON, Jan. 28—Six members of an alleged holdup gang, who told a state liquor department official they were "hopped up" with drinks before their robberies, were to be arraigned in Akron's municipal court today.

Assistant Attorney General Charles Schnur, prosecutor for the state liquor board, investigated the role that strong drink played in causing the alleged bandits, who were captured Monday, to rob at gunpoint.

Police closed in on the youths, only one of which was over 21, after one of them, Robert C. Gordon, 18, played "Russian roulette" with a loaded pistol and lost. He died in City hospital.

The pistol was stolen in an Akron bar holdup Sunday. The six, all friends of Gordon, were quickly rounded up by police.

All members of the gang told Schnur that they had had an overabundance of beer and liquor before the holdups.

Cemetery Group Reelects Chiefs

Henry M. Crites was reelected president of the board of trustees of Forest cemetery association at a meeting of the stockholders Tuesday night in the Pickaway County court-house.

Other officers reelected for the 1948 term were: Robert L. Bremer, vice-president; Miss Mary E. Ebert, treasurer; and Edson Crites, superintendent and secretary.

To the board of directors, Durward D. Dowden was elected to fill the post vacated by the death of George Grand-Girard, and the Rev. Samuel Elsea was reelected to serve another term.

The board also includes C. A. Leist, A. L. Wilder and Guy Culp.

In his annual report to the board, Edson Crites said 125 burials were made in Forest cemetery during 1947, which raises the total number interred to 10,528.

Only $1,668 Paid To Polio Fund

With only three more days to go in the current Pickaway County March of Dimes campaign, Don Henkle, chairman of the local drive, says that Pickaway counties still have to dig further down in their jeans to bring up $8,332 to complete the quota set for the local drive.

"We have collected only $1,668 to date," says Henkle, "leaving us a long row to hoe before Saturday," he added.

"The $1,668 collected so far isn't even enough to pay for the treatment three of our county youngsters still need at Children's hospital in Columbus."

Saturday will end the local campaign with the sale of tags on the streets of Circleville.

The agenda for the conference awaited today's return from Minnesota of Sen. Ball (R) Minn., chairman of the informal group.

One member of the group said that the Marshall Plan statements of Former President Herbert Hoover and John Foster Dulles probably would be taken up at the meeting.

Hoover's proposals, which ERP formula advanced by Secretary of State George Marshall, were credited with giving new heart to Republican opponents of the administration plan.

Dulles, who is foreign policy adviser to both the United Nations U. S. delegation and to Gov. Thomas E. Dewey of New York, put himself on record for the Marshall Plan. Dulles emphasized the need for a shakeup of U. S. administration in Germany and for an economic alliance in Western Europe.

Lass Resting After Operation

CHICAGO, Jan. 28—Five-pound Linda Ann Stern, born last Jan. 14, is resting comfortably in an incubator in Michael Reese hospital today after undergoing an unusual operation to permit her to eat.

Dr. Siegfried Strauss performed the operation that repaired a condition in which the child's food and air passages were connected.

But Linda Ann in her fight to live drew heavily from the blood bank and now she owes six pints for which her parents can't pay. She may need more transfusions, so her parents, Irving P. Stern, 46, a war veteran, and his wife, Rachel, 30, are appealing for blood donors.

IN CIRCLEVILLE, Dan McClain, manager of the Ohio Fuel office, cautioned local residents that low pressures were probable here in the next 24 to 36 hours.

He stated that pressure in the company's chief lead-in mains were reaching the minimum. The official cautioned householders to keep close vigil on water heaters and furnaces so that pilots lights would not be extinguished by lowering pressure.

McClain said the state public utilities commission's order excluded public buildings on the grounds that some institutions housed in them might be considered essential. However, warehouses and other such non-essential commercial structures would be cut to the lowest possible minimum.

The spokesman said the situation brought on by continued sub-zero temperatures was so serious that the firm already had drawn up orders instructing home-owners on how to turn off their own gas.

The company representative said mayors, county commissioners, police and sheriff's deputies would be asked to cooperate in spreading the news of the commercial curtailment order.

THE COMMISSION said food and grocery stores would be exempted from the order. It also was expected that most municipal and state government offices would be excluded as most of those serviced by gas would come under the essential heading.

It was colder in Ohio this morning than anywhere in the United States, according to unofficial reports.

Perry County in the south central part of the state led with readings of 32 below at Mt. Perry, 28 at Crooksville, 26 at Corning and 24 below zero at New Lexington. All of the county schools were closed due to the intense cold.

The government - inspected thermometer at the Wooster sewage disposal plant registered 22 below, one degree lower than the official reading of 21 below zero at Atlantic, Ia.

Observers based their forecast of milder weather on a wave of Pacific warm air which has moved into Northwestern Canada. In contrast with Ohio's low temperatures this morning the proverbial North Dakota and Minnesota "ice box" reported readings of only around zero.

A sunny sky over the entire state was assisting in the recovery, but observers said the mercury rise would be slow through today and tonight. They said the low range tonight would be zero to 10 above and that the mercury would climb to a range of 20 to 30 above tomorrow afternoon.

Bandits Said 'Hopped Up'

AKRON, Jan. 28.—Six members of an alleged holdup gang, who told a state liquor department official they were "hopped up" with drinks before their robberies, were to be arraigned in Akron's municipal court today.

Assistant Attorney General Charles Schnur, prosecutor for the state liquor board, investigated the role that strong drink played in causing the alleged bandits, who were captured Monday, to rob at gunpoint.

Police closed in on the youths, only one of which was over 21, after one of them, Robert C. Gordon, 18, played "Russian roulette" with a loaded pistol and lost. He died in City hospital.

The pistol was stolen in an Akron bar holdup Sunday. The six, all friends of Gordon, were quickly rounded up by police. All members of the gang told Schnur that they had had an overabundance of beer and liquor before the holdups.

On the other hand, Rep. Dingell (D) Mich. offered the administration's program for a $40 tax cut for all individuals, offset by increased levies on corporation profits.

THIS LOST by a vote of 19 to 5, with four Democrats joining the Republicans in opposition. The Republican measure would make percentage cuts in income taxes of 30 to 10 percent, beginning with the lower-income brackets; increase individual tax exemptions from $500 to $600; give added relief to the blind and aged; and provide benefits to married couples through nationwide extension of the community property plan for tax purposes.

Lass Resting After Operation

CHICAGO, Jan. 28.—Five-pound Linda Ann Stern, born last Jan. 14, is resting comfortably in an incubator in Michael Reese hospital today after undergoing an unusual operation to permit her to eat.

Dr. Siegfried Strauss performed the operation that repaired a condition in which the child's food and air passages were connected.

But Linda Ann in her fight to live drew heavily from the blood bank and now she owes six pints for which her parents can't pay. She may need more transfusions, so her parents, Irving P. Stern, 46, a war veteran, and his wife, Rachel, 30, are appealing for blood donors.

Army Paper Tells Of War Booty

BERLIN, Jan. 28—The United States Army newspaper Stars and Stripes revealed today that the Russians have taken art treasures estimated at $170,000,000 from the Dresden museum.

Raphael's world-loved "Sistine Madonna" was listed among the paintings removed by the Soviet forces as "war trophies."

In a special dispatch from its correspondent now touring the Soviet occupation zone, the Army newspaper said that some 1700 paintings—the best of the museum's collection, once one of the world's greatest, were sent to Russia early in 1945, after the Russians took the city.

HUBERT Semesch, in charge of the museum, declared that the $170,000,000 valuation of the treasures taken by the Red army is "conservative."

Among the works removed were masterpieces by the greatest artists of the Italian, Dutch, French and Spanish schools.

The Russian war booty included: Correggio's famous "Holy Night," 17 of Rembrandt's best works, and an equal number of Peter-Paul Rubens'; 24 Van Dyck portraits; six Palma Vecchios; seven classic paintings by Poussin.

The Russians took also several works of each of the following old masters: Ruysdael, Murillo, Tintoretto, Vermeer, Velasquez, and Veronese.

Among the modern painters whose works the Russians removed were outstanding masterpieces of such painters as Van Gogh, Manet, Renoir, and Degas.

The Sistine Madonna, one of Raphael's greatest works, is listed by the Encyclopedia Britannica as "the glory of the Dresden gallery." Its value on the open market could not even be estimated.

Site of General Lee's Surrender To Be Reconstructed at Appomattox As National Historical Monument

"SURRENDER HOUSE"—The McLean residence at Appomattox Court House, Va., site of General Lee's surrender, as it looked before it was dismantled. Note sad state of disrepair at time photo was taken.

By JOHN PETERSEN
Central Press Correspondent

WASHINGTON—The year was 1865. The day, April 9. The place, a two-story red-brick structure known in the vicinity of Appomattox Court House, Va., as the McLean residence.

The occasion was a memorable one. Two men, both relieved that the tragic war which had divided the Union was finally coming to an end, met in the four-room house to draw up and sign the terms of surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia.

The men, of course, were Gen. Robert E. Lee, tall, strikingly dressed in a new uniform, and Gen. Ulysses S. Grant, short, clad in the uniform of a private with nothing but his general's stars to distinguish him from any other soldier.

Of the two men, history tells us, it was Grant, the victor, who was the most ill at ease. For a half hour he beat around the bush conversationally until, at last, General Lee reminded him of the business at hand.

At Lee's request, the considerate Grant permitted the Confederate cavalrymen and artillerymen to keep their horses to help with the spring plowing.

FACTS about this occasion are written for all to behold in the pages of the history of the United States. Far less known is what became of the McLean residence, of the "Surrender House" at Appomattox Court House.

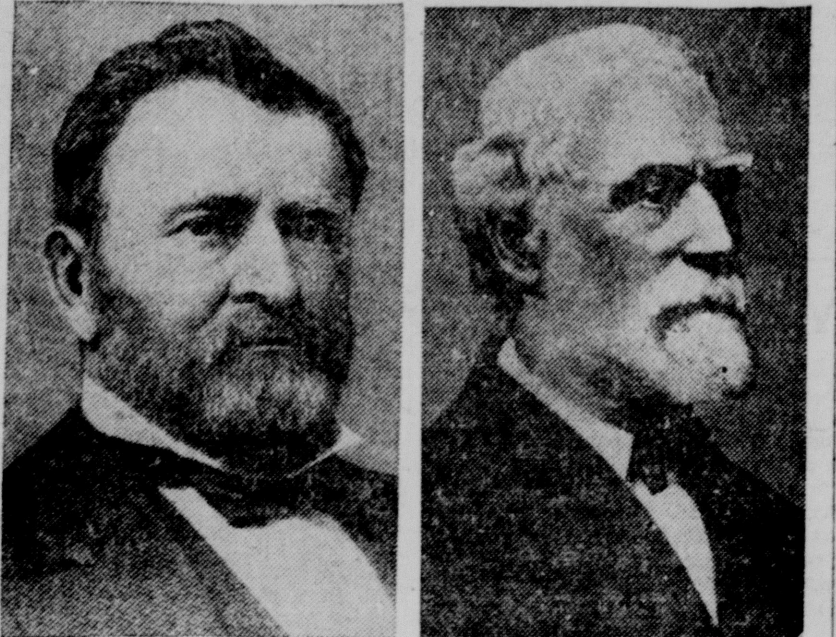

For the next 28 years the brick house stood, virtually unnoticed and certainly not revered as the showplace which it should have been, having served as the setting of one of the momentous events in American history.

It was not until 1891 that the house came into the limelight again—and then but briefly. It was reported purchased, for $10,000, by a M. E. Dunlap, who said he wanted to remove it to the Chicago World's Fair.

This project failed to materialize, however, and Dunlap later decided to tear the building down and re-erect it on a permanent site in Washington, D. C. This plan also came to naught.

However—sadly enough—the house was torn down, although not until a P. C. Hubbard, of Lynchburg, Va., had made detailed measurements and drawings. The purpose was to have the information on hand for the restoration of the building.

Now it has once again been decided to reconstruct the famous McLean residence. Newton B. Drury, director of the National

Park Service, recently announced a contract has been awarded.

Through coincidence, the contract has been let to the son of the man who was engaged 55 years ago to tear the building down.

The man employed to do this work in 1893 was C. W. Hancock, of Appomattox, Va. When the bids for the work of reconstructing the house were opened, it was discovered the low bidder was the firm of C. W. Hancock and Son, Inc., of Lynchburg, Va. The low bid was $49,555.

The elder Hancock apparently never received any pay for the work he did in 1893, for the syndicate represented by Dunlap ran out of funds. Nor did Hubbard receive any money, until 50 years later, the government bought the drawings after carefully checking their authenticity.

"In the early part of 1893 my father, C. W. Hancock, a local contractor at Appomattox, Va., informed me that he had received a contract from a syndicate to take down the McLean residence and prepare it for shipment elsewhere," says Hancock junior.

"At this time my father employed Hubbard to take the measurements, make the drawings and details and write the description of all materials pertaining to the McLean property."

"WORK was soon started, all of the materials were carefully taken down, nails drawn, bundled and crated and stored on the site, covered with temporary sheds awaiting instructions to load and ship."

"After some time, my father was informed that the syndicate was unable to secure the intended lot and neither were they in a position to pay him for his work.

"Later it was reported that the materials were disappearing so a watchman was employed for several years. After his services were discontinued, what remained of the materials disappeared."

"MY DAD kept the drawings at Appomattox until about 1900 when he took them to our new office in Lynchburg. In 1924, when I moved to Huntington, W. Va., he gave me the drawings, saying that at some future date, no doubt, they would be needed. He also requested me to see that Hubbard was paid for his services."

The house will be reconstructed at Appomattox Court House National Historical Monument, Virginia, and will be refurbished in the period of the Civil War.

There was a broad veranda in front supported by six square columns. The two rooms on each floor were separated by a corridor which ran straight through the building.

At the time of surrender, the furnishings were carted away by the victorious soldiers.

However, the table on which the surrender terms were signed by Lee and Grant is now in the Smithsonian Institution, and the flag of truce used by the Confederates—an old white towel—is in the National Park Service museum at Custer Battlefield National Monument in Montana.

It is believed that Gen. George Custer himself carried this flag from Appomattox. Many years later it was found among his personal effects and presented to the park service by his family.

Engineer Strike Is Called Off

CLEVELAND, Jan. 28—The Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers today sent out messages from headquarters here calling off a threatened nationwide strike slated for Feb. 1.

The creation yesterday by President Truman of a fact-finding board to investigate a wage and working rule dispute forced a 60-day postponement of the strike of 238,000 railroad workers.

President Alvanley Johnston of the Engineers expressed doubt as to whether the messages could be delivered in time.

Wright Rests After Illness

DAYTON, Jan. 28—Orville Wright, 76-year-old inventor of the airplane, was reported resting comfortably today at the Miami Valley hospital after suffering stroke in his laboratory yesterday afternoon.

Physicians said Wright's illness was similar to that suffered last October when he had a "fainting spell."

The first man to pilot a heavier-than-air craft, Wright with his late brother, Wilbur, pioneered the first flight at Kitty Hawk, N. C., on Dec. 17, 1903.

Fire Levels Night Club

COLUMBUS, Jan. 28—The Franklin County sheriff's office reported that the Showboat Night Club on East Broad Street burned to the ground early today.

First reports indicated that the building was a complete loss.

The sheriff's office said fire departments from Reynoldsburg and Millin, Truro and Marion Townships answered the first call about 4 a. m., shortly after the establishment closed for the night. No one was reported injured.

7 Ohioans Due To Share Fund

PAINEVILLE, Jan. 28—Seven Northern Ohioans are expected to share in the $20,000,000 estate of the late James W. Corrigan, prominent industrialist who died in 1928.

Under terms of the will, the death Thursday in New York of Mrs. Laura Mae Corrigan, the industrialist's widow, now permits distribution of the estate.

Weather Experts Make Progress In Creating Artificial Rains

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28—Uncle Sam's scientific nephews report progress today at giving the weather a "new look" which may mean many millions of dollars to farmers and others affected by the whims of Mother Nature.

The U. S. Weather Bureau, the Air Force, the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, and the Navy are collaborating in artificial snow and rain production.

Dr. Harry Wexler, chief of the weather bureau's division of special scientific services, disclosed that exhaustive tests are being carried on with "supercooled clouds" at Wilmington, Ohio.

Meanwhile, Rep. Simpson (R) Ill., is pressing for early passage of a weather-control measure which would authorize $500,000 for work designed to gear the nation's weather to the era of atomic achievement.

ON THE SENATE side, Sen. Hayden (D) Ariz., says he stands ready to support legislation for elaborate weather-control research. The senator points out that he comes from a very dry state and knows the value of rain.

The Wilmington experiments, according to Dr. Francis W. Reichelderfer, chief of the weather bureau, are being conducted with "a view to the very great economic importance that might result from development of successful methods of artificial production of rainfall."

Facilities of the Air Force's all-weather flying division are being used to determine results of "seeding" clouds with dry ice (solid carbon dioxide) and silver iodide, which also has ice nucleation properties.

Also being investigated is the possibility that artificial methods can be used to create, destroy or deflect hurricanes.

Besides high-flying airplanes and the latest radar devices, equipment includes a tight network of 55 ground stations—one to a square mile—able to measure winds, temperature, humidity, and the amount and rate of precipitation.

RADIO BALLOON sounding equipment also is used for the aloft, and meteorological radar equipment for evaluating and automatically plotting the precipitation rates at various altitudes.

The clouds physics research project is based at Wilmington by Dr. Ross Gunn, director of physical research for the bureau.

His Washington colleague, Wexler, points out:

"We are measuring the physical properties and characteristics of various types of clouds capable of producing rain or snow."

"The factors controlling the stability of natural clouds and the physical changes taking place that determine the condensation of a cloud into rain are all imperfectly known and understood."

"A carefully controlled study of them is part of the program."

Clouds are coy, as anyone who has squinted at them knows, and Wexler says the success of the seeding experiments depends on finding clouds that are nearly ready to discharge their moisture.

Thieves Grab Photo Stores

LONDON, Jan. 28—Thieves made off today with $35,000 worth of photographic equipment from United States naval stores in the Mayfair district of London.

The thieves eluded armed Marine guards to enter the premises on North Audley street.

Bolivia Orders Mass Arrests

LA PAZ, Jan. 28—The Bolivian capital of La Paz was under a state of siege today and mass arrests were ordered following the uncovering of a plot against the state last week.

Among those already arrested are a former vice-president of Bolivia, Julian Montellano, and a former cabinet member, Dionisio Fojanini.

The Bolivian government released documents purporting to prove that it crushed a carefully planned revolt Sunday.

It was said that 400 men, armed with guns and knives, planned to assault the government palace and assassinate 60 officials.

Ex-Secretary To Seek Post

DEFIANCE, Jan. 28—Dan Batt, a Defiance attorney, announced today he would be a candidate at the May primary for the Democratic nomination as congressman from the 7-county, fifth district.

Batt was secretary to Frank C. Kniffin when he was congressman from the district previous to 1938. Willard Thomas of Vaughnsville, who was an unsuccessful Democratic nominee in the district two years ago, also has announced his candidacy.

Cliff Clevenger of Bryan apparently will be unopposed for the GOP nomination for his sixth consecutive term.

DAYTON, Jan. 28—Orville Wright, 76-year-old inventor of the airplane, was reported resting comfortably today at the Miami Valley hospital after suffering stroke in his laboratory yesterday afternoon.

Physicians said Wright's illness was similar to that suffered last October when he had a "fainting spell."

The first man to pilot a heavier-than-air craft, Wright with his late brother, Wilbur, pioneered the first flight at Kitty Hawk, N. C., on Dec. 17, 1903.

Fire Levels Night Club

COLUMBUS, Jan. 28—The Franklin County sheriff's office reported that the Showboat Night Club on East Broad Street burned to the ground early today.

First reports indicated that the building was a complete loss.

The sheriff's office said fire departments from Reynoldsburg and Mifflin, Truro and Marion Townships answered the first call about 4 a. m., shortly after the establishment closed for the night. No one was reported injured.

7 Ohioans Due To Share Fund

PAINESVILLE, Jan. 28—Seven Northern Ohioans are expected to share in the $20,000,000 estate of the late James W. Corrigan, prominent industrialist who died in 1928.

Under terms of the will, the death Thursday in New York of Mrs. Laura Mae Corrigan, the industrialist's widow, now permits distribution of the estate.

Weather Experts Make Progress In Creating Artificial Rains

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28—Uncle Sam's scientific nephews report progress today at giving the weather a "new look" which may mean many millions of dollars to farmers and others affected by the whims of Mother Nature.

The U. S. Weather Bureau, the Air Force, the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, and the Navy are collaborating in artificial snow and rain production.

Dr. Harry Wexler, chief of the weather bureau's division of special scientific services, disclosed that exhaustive tests are being carried on with "super-cooled clouds" at Wilmington, Ohio.

Meanwhile, Rep. Simpson (R) Ill., is pressing for early passage of a weather-control measure which would authorize $500,000 for work designed to gear the nation's weather to the era of atomic achievement.

ON THE SENATE side, Sen. Hayden (D) Ariz., says he stands ready to support legislation for elaborate weather - control research. The senator points out that he comes from a very dry state and knows the value of rain.

The Wilmington experiments, according to Dr. Francis W. Reichelderfer, chief of the weather bureau, are being conducted with "a view to the very great economic importance that might result from development of successful methods of artificial production of rainfall."

Facilities of the Air Force's all-weather flying division are being used to determine results of "seeding" clouds with dry ice (solid carbon dioxide) and silver iodide, which also has ice nucleation properties.

Also being investigated is the possibility that artificial methods can be used to create, destroy or deflect hurricanes.

Besides high-flying airplanes and the latest radar devices, equipment includes a tight network of 55 ground stations—one to a square mile—able to measure winds, temperature, humidity, and the amount and rate of precipitation.

RADIO BALLOON sounding equipment also is used for the aloft, and meteorological radar equipment for evaluating and automatically plotting the precipitation rates at various altitudes.

The clouds physics research project is based at Wilmington by Dr. Ross Gunn, director of physical research for the bureau. His Washington colleague, Wexler, points out:

"We are measuring the physical properties and characteristics of various types of clouds capable of producing rain or snow."

"The factors controlling the stability of natural clouds and the physical changes taking place that determine the condensation of a cloud into rain are all imperfectly known and understood."

"A carefully controlled study of them is part of the program."

Clouds are coy, as anyone who has squinted at them knows, and Wexler says the success of the seeding experiments depends on finding clouds that are nearly ready to discharge their moisture.

Bolivia Orders Mass Arrests

LA PAZ, Jan. 28—The Bolivian capital of La Paz was under a state of siege today and mass arrests were ordered following the uncovering of a plot against the state last week.

Among those already arrested are a former vice-president of Bolivia, Julian Montellano, and a former cabinet member, Dionisio Fojanini.

The Bolivian government released documents purporting to prove that it crushed a carefully planned revolt Sunday.

It was said that 400 men, armed with guns and knives, planned to assault the government palace and assassinate 60 officials.

Ex-Secretary To Seek Post

DEFIANCE, Jan. 28 — Dan Batt, a Defiance attorney, announced today he would be a candidate at the May primary for the Democratic nomination as congressman from the 7-county, fifth district.

Batt was secretary to Frank C. Kniffin when he was congressman from the district previous to 1938. Willard Thomas of Vaughnsville, who was an unsuccessful Democratic nominee in the district two years ago, also has announced his candidacy.

Cliff Clevenger of Bryan apparently will be unopposed for the GOP nomination for his sixth consecutive term.

WOMEN IN JAPAN

KEYES BEECH writes from Tokyo that in addition to their worries about the working out of the new political regime, Japanese men have to cope with new ideas in the home as well. The writer says that these men not only disapprove of an independent status for women, but that they also completely lack understanding of the principles involved.

Many of them have only recently learned such Western customs as opening a door for a lady and holding her coat. Now they are faced with the proposition that women are their equals in every way. This bafflement is not only on the social level. Women have become a force to be reckoned with in politics, holding 25 seats in the diet and places in local assemblies and councils. They also comprise 25 per cent of the total membership in labor unions.

Careful investigation would show these bewildered Japanese men that their women are not alone in wanting to have it both ways. American women have fairly well succeeded in attaining independence while at the same time they retain the pleasant prerequisites of femininity. Financial independence and the ability to stand on her own feet do not preclude the wish of the modern woman for pleasant flattery and polite services.

GOING IT ALONE

THE VAN WERT chapter of the Red Cross has lost its charter because it raised its funds through a local Community Chest and not by a separate drive.

This rule has not always been in force. For years branches of the Red Cross and other welfare organizations in various communities joined in a single fund-raising campaign. This avoided the annoyance of continuous solicitations for one charity after another, disturbing business men and possibly causing them finally to refuse contributions to any more special campaigns.

Some time ago the Red Cross decided that it was not getting enough money from the merged campaigns. The local fund managers may also have made special rules which the Red Cross disliked. At any rate, they are now going their own way, and encouraging other charities to do likewise.

The Community Chest seemed a particularly happy solution of the charities' ever-present struggle to get funds. Many will regret that the Red Cross does not see its way to join with it.

Special to Central Press

WASHINGTON—A real blow-up may develop when the CIO executive board and its Political Action Committee meets in Washington late this month to draft the CIO national policy.

Henry Wallace's presidential candidacy is the reason. Wallace's third party move has widened the breach between right-wing and left-wing within the CIO. Some of the left-wing CIO affiliates—such as the longshoremen, the smelter and packing house workers—favor his candidacy. However, right-wing CIO groups are dead set against the former vice president and many have pulled out of the American Labor Party because that organization endorsed him.

CIO President Phil Murray has already rapped the knuckles of both pro-Wallace and anti-Wallace groups for announcing their positions. He demanded they keep silent until the national policy of the CIO is laid down. Drafting that policy, incidentally, may provide some fireworks.

These Days

Dr. Nathan Schachner has written, for the current issue of the American Jewish Year Book, a learned and interesting article entitled, "Church, State and Education," which shows what the law has been and is concerning religion in the schools of the various parts of the United States. While his summary of the history of this subject is of value, what he misses altogether is that atheism may be taught our children, but not the word of God, not The Bible, not the Psalms, not the Prophets, not the Apostles. Karl Marx is legal in the schools, but not Isaiah or St. Mark. They suffer from Biblical affiliation.

For many, this is a very serious question. They say that religion has no place in the schools. But has anti-religion a place? The real difficulty is that the Catholics object to the St. James version of The Bible; the Protestants object to the Douai Version; and the Jews object to both. But does anyone object to a materialistic, biologic interpretation of man's place in society; does anyone complain that his child is being bombarded with an amoral position that man is a product of his environment and that morals are a matter of superstition and social pressures?

In a word, all the talk of Church and State has nothing to do with the fundamental question, which is, what is being done to offset and counteract their corruption by teachers who are atheists and who propagandize an atheistic conception of morals in the public schools?

Dr. Schachner's article does not deal with this at all. Unfortunately, most of those who discuss this question are too concerned with money for bus rides and too little with the need for God.

The real danger is not that the public schools will become sectarian but that fastidious parents will not send their children to public school. An increasingly large number do send their children to private and parochial schools. The independent (private) schools are not only for the rich and fashionable but for children whose parents object to a materialistic, amoral education. They want their children to learn not only about the amoeba but also about the Beatitudes. It is a question of moral standards.

Unfortunately, while the attack is being made on religion—every kind of religion—with increasing force, the children of God are divided into quarreling, bickering sects who hate each other, denounce each other, discriminate against each other. They have forgotten that Christ taught:

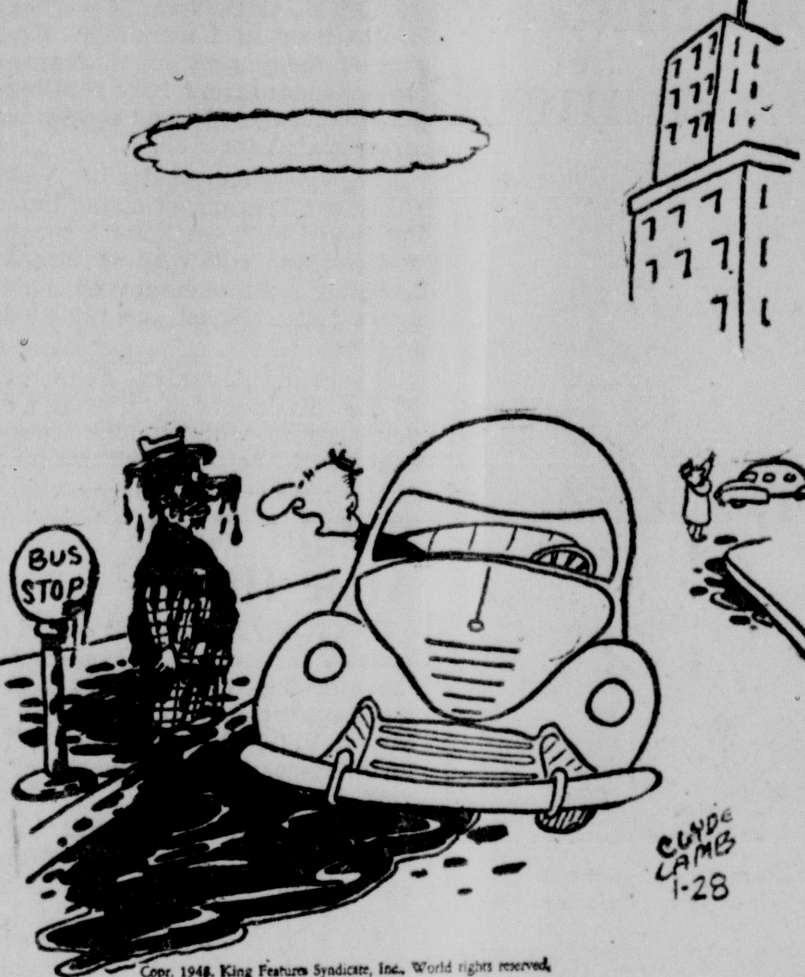

"... This is my commandment: That ye love one another, as I have loved you. Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends. . ."

And also, He said: "Ye have heard that it hath been said, 'Thou shalt love thy neighbour, and hate thine enemy.' But I say unto you, 'Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you. . .'"

But few of those Christians some of them call themselves, pay heed to this counsel. They fret and fume over school lunches and who shall get them out of the taxpayer's money, but they do not worry about the poison that is daily being poured into the minds of their own children, poisons that have already produced an unmeasurable debasement of man in Europe and projects here a society that knows no better guide than the rule of reason and necessity, the passion for self-satisfaction and indulgence.

Maybe the main thing the so-called "teen-agers" need is a sensible name.

DIET AND HEALTH

Correct Diet of Mother-to-Be Reduces Later Complications

By HERMAN N. BUNDESEN, M.D.

DURING the past 25 years, research has established beyond all doubt that good health requires good food to maintain it. Quite literally, the body benefits in a thousand ways by a well-balanced diet. Only recently, however, have we come to realize what this kind of eating may mean to the expectant mother and her unborn child. Recent scientific studies show that the diet of women even prior to pregnancy is important to the health of their children. If this is so, it is easy to understand the great necessity of maintaining nutrition throughout the all-important months during which the child is being formed.

Various Substances

Today we have definite evidence on this score. It shows that lack of various substances found in food—vitamins, minerals and proteins—over a long period of time, may interfere with proper development before birth, thus producing defects in the baby, hinder breast feeding afterwards, and so lead to disease.

In the last 35 years, the death rate among infants under one year of age has been reduced by 82 per cent. That is a record of which we may all be proud and yet, in this same period of time, the number of babies who die at birth or within the first 30 days of life has dropped only 1.8 per cent. In other words, all our marvelous progress in saving babies has occurred in the one month to one year period. Today, many doctors feel that the newer knowledge of nutrition has given us the clue to an equal accomplishment in safeguarding the very beginning of life.

Experiments Carried Out

Many experiments have been carried out to show the part played by diet in the health of the mother-to-be and her baby. For example, a study was made on more than 5000 mothers. Half of them were given a dietary supplement containing vitamins and minerals. These women who received these supplements had fewer babies born before the normal time. Furthermore, there was a decrease in the number of infant deaths and stillbirths.

Good nutrition is also important in aiding in the mother's recovery after the birth of the baby, as well as in her ability to nurse her baby and, of course, no food has ever been found so satisfactory for a baby as breast milk.

Better Nutrition

Thus, it would seem that better nutrition of the mother-to-be would result in fewer stillbirths, fewer cases of anemia, toxemia or poisoning, and reduced infant mortality.

Many figures have been collected which seem to show that about one-third of the people in the United States are underfed. One reason, of course, is lack of money to buy enough food, but another, which affects a great many more people, is lack of knowledge as to the right foods to buy, even where money is no consideration. In view of this, the expectant mother has no greater duty towards herself and her child than to consult her physician as soon as possible to make sure that she is eating the proper diet throughout her pregnancy.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

A. S.: Will you please tell me why my six-year-old child grinds his teeth while he is asleep at night?

Answer: Grinding the teeth is a sign of nervousness, and the treatment of it consists in proper hygiene.

The child should sleep a sufficient number of hours in a quiet room, with enough covers over him. He should not be fed or given anything to drink during the night. The diet for such a child should consist of plenty of green vegetables and fresh fruits.

CHAPTER TWENTY-FIVE

THE SHERIFF was cowed by Catherine's fury. Not so Officer Cuchinello. Cuchinello was provoked to anger. They had plenty of grounds to make a search. But plenty. "Maybe you'd like to take a look at this."

He produced a snow-soaked ball of paper from his pocket. He straightened the ball out with dexterous fingers and the folds of a handkerchief. It was an oversized envelope, crumpled and stained with smears of blood.

Catherine looked at it, and her breath caught. Frannie looked at the envelope and then at Catherine. Catherine nodded. She couldn't speak. She was back in the dreadful stillness of Mike's living room in the apartment on Fifty-fifth Street, with Mike slumped across the desk and bands of wet redness spreading over the heavy cap of his silver hair, wet redness in crisscrosses and bands that had trickled sluggishly to the envelope on the desk at his elbow, the envelope in Cuchinello's hands. The stains on it, fading now, were Mike's life blood. The envelope had bulged then. It was empty now.

Even Frannie was stopped. She gazed at the envelope fascinatedly. Her skin had a greenish tinge to it. "Where was that found, officer?"

"Down there," Cuchinello was gratified at the effect he had produced. He waved toward the windows. "It was lying in the snow near some bushes below the windows of this room."

He went on to explain that the crumpled ball of paper had been found by another officer on a patrol of the grounds earlier that morning. "Maybe," Cuchinello conceded handsomely, "Miss Lister didn't throw it there. Anyone on this floor could have done it. A door from the hall leads out to the veranda and a lot of these rooms open on it. We were talking to Inspector McKee in New York and he gave us the set-up, so we came here first."

Frannie's pallor didn't get any better. Her throat seemed to be dry. She had to clear it before she said, helplessly, "I don't see, with two or three bathrooms available—and plenty of matches and ash trays, why anyone would have disposed of the envelope in that fashion, by simply throwing it away . . ."

Cuchinello shrugged. "People with the jitters do funny things sometimes. That's how they get caught."

Attracted by the open door, the sound of voices, the others began to come into the room then. Tom came first. He listened to Frannie and stared at the envelope spread out on the table, his big handsome face dark, his gaze disordered. He ran a hand through his hair, pulled at his tie. His fashionable patients and adoring nurses wouldn't have recognized his ordinarily mellifluous voice.

"Good Lord, the bonds!" he exclaimed harshly. "Where are they? If it's true they were in that envelope, someone in this place has them. . . . They've got to be found."

Nicky came in on Tom's heels. He was equally startled. His concern was for Catherine. "To heck with the bonds! Why are they picking on you?" He put an arm around her shoulders, eyed the Sheriff and Officer Cuchinello with angry disdain. Like Frannie, he could be cutting. Catherine's heart warmed at his championship. Then Hat and Stephen Darrell sauntered along the hall, paused and came in.

Everyone talked at once. Innocence was implicit in their questions, their shrugs, their cries and exclamations. "I know nothing about the envelope or the bonds it contained." They all said that without saying it in words.

There was something else. Another emotion had been added. It was new—and ugly. They were suspicious of one another. Up until then they had stood shoulder to shoulder. The envelope exploded their solidarity, made them turn and peer at each other fearfully, exploring. You could feel the mutual suspicion like water rising in the bottom of a boat, slow, heavy, menacing. They were no longer a family, brother and sister, husband and wife, friend and friend; they were antagonists fighting for survival. It was Mike's murderer who had removed the bonds from his desk in the apartment on Fifty-ninth Street. "Was it you? Was it you? Was it you?" The unspoken demand, the voiceless conjecture, the sidelong glances darkened the light and poisoned the air.

Only by the finding of the bonds could they be individually released. Cuchinello pointed that out. He was capable and downright. The bonds had been carried up here from New York. It wasn't likely that anyone would tote an incriminating empty envelope around. They were from New York. The bonds were missing. Every one of them would have to be searched. Their rooms and the cars they came in would have to be searched.

They agreed in concert, with no perceptible hesitation. The Sheriff and Cuchinello discussed ways and means. If the men would proceed to an empty bedroom in the other wing, and the ladies—with the exception of Catherine, whose room and person had been given a clean bill of health—would go to a vacant bedroom in this wing? Mrs. Muir would be pressed into service to search the ladies, if they were willing? Of course, Cuchinello said, they could stand on their rights. But in their own interests . . .

"Yes," Tom slapped a balled fist sharply into an open palm. "I demand a search!" On the far side of the room, holding a match to Frannie's cigarette, to Hat's, Stephen Darrell said quietly, "We all want one, old man—and the sooner we begin . . ."

He had looked at Catherine, once, when he first came in. She had glanced away, but there wasn't a moment when she wasn't conscious of him, moving about on the fringe of various groups, aloof, almost disinterested, his head bent, his hands in his pockets, pausing to toe the carpet, to listen to the two officials.

When pushed far enough he exploded. It was a sort of spontaneous combustion. His fits of rage were rare. When they came, they were frightening. At one moment he would be his handsome, somewhat stolid little Lord Fauntleroy self, at the next, his face would be convulsed, crimson, and he would be shouting.

THE LONG RUN COUNTS

PROBABILITIES are good things to depend on. What occurs some one time is of no importance compared to over-all results in the long run. In fact, probabilities are the result of the cumulative events of both favorable and unfavorable nature. So no matter what kind of disaster may befall you through observing them during one particular deal, don't let it upset your dependence upon them the next time a similar situation presents itself.

First, look at the trumps. With nine, probabilities would indicate one probable losing trick. In hearts, the probabilities were for one loser only—if either the K or Q happened to be with West. Once the card was in the hand, the making of game seems to depend entirely on whether or not the diamond finesse will work. There is pretty close to an even chance it will, only slightly less because of East opening the bidding. So the soundness of the contract seems assured, as it apparently depends upon an almost-even-chance finesse.

But this time everything went wrong. The second club lead was ruffed by declarer, the diamond Q went through to the K, the spade K won by the K, the spade Q, J and 10 scored to make South

WOMEN IN JAPAN

KEYES BEECH writes from Tokyo that in addition to their worries about the working out of the new political regime, Japanese men have to cope with new ideas in the home as well. The writer says that these men not only disapprove of an independent status for women, but that they also completely lack understanding of the principles involved.

Many of them have only recently learned such Western customs as opening a door for a lady and holding her coat. Now they are faced with the proposition that women are their equals in every way. This bafflement is not only on the social level. Women have become a force to be reckoned with in politics, holding 25 seats in the diet and places in local assemblies and councils. They also comprise 25 per cent of the total membership in labor unions.

Careful investigation would show these bewildered Japanese men that their women are not alone in wanting to have it both ways. American women have fairly well succeeded in attaining independence while at the same time they retain the pleasant prerequisites of femininity. Financial independence and the ability to stand on her own feet do not preclude the wish of the modern woman for pleasant flattery and polite services.

GOING IT ALONE

THE VAN WERT chapter of the Red Cross has lost its charter because it raised its funds through a local Community Chest and not by a separate drive.

This rule has not always been in force. For years branches of the Red Cross and other welfare organizations in various communities joined in a single fund-raising campaign. This avoided the annoyance of continuous solicitations for one charity after another, disturbing business men and possibly causing them finally to refuse contributions to any more special campaigns.

Some time ago the Red Cross decided that it was not getting enough money from the merged campaigns. The local fund managers may also have made special rules which the Red Cross disliked. At any rate, they are now going their own way, and encouraging other charities to do likewise.

The Community Chest seemed a particularly happy solution of the charities' ever-present struggle to get funds. Many will regret that the Red Cross does not see its way to join with it.

George E. Sokolsky's

These Days

Dr. Nathan Schachner has written, for the current issue of the American Jewish Year Book, a learned and interesting article entitled, "Church, State and Education," which shows what the law has been and is concerning religion in the schools of the various parts of the United States. While his summary of the history of this subject is of value, what he misses altogether is that atheism may be taught our children, but not the word of God, not the Bible, not the Psalms, not the Prophets, not the Apostles. Karl Marx is legal in the schools, but not Isaiah or St. Mark. They suffer from Biblical affiliation.

For many, this is a very serious question. They say that religion has no place in the schools. But has anti-religion a place? The real difficulty is that the Catholics object to the St. James version of the Bible; the Protestants object to the Douai Version; and the Jews object to both. But does anyone object to a materialistic, biologic interpretation of man's place in society; does anyone complain that his child is being bombarded with an amoral position that man is a product of his environment and that morals are a matter of superstition and social pressures?

In a word, all the talk of Church and State has nothing to do with the fundamental question, which is, what is being done to offset and counteract their corruption by teachers who are atheists and who propagandize an atheistic conception of morals in the public schools?

Dr. Schachner's article does not deal with this at all. Unfortunately, most of those who discuss this question are too concerned with money for bus rides and too little with the need for God.

The real danger is not that the public schools will become sectarian but that fastidious parents will not send their children to public school. An increasingly large number do send their children to private and parochial schools. The independent (private) schools are not only for the rich and fashionable but for children whose parents object to a materialistic, amoral education. They want their children to learn not only about the amoeba but also about the Beatitudes. It is a question of moral standards.

Unfortunately, while the attack is being made on religion—every kind of religion—with increasing force, the children of God are divided into quarreling, bickering sects who hate each other, denounce each other, discriminate against each other. They have forgotten that Christ taught:

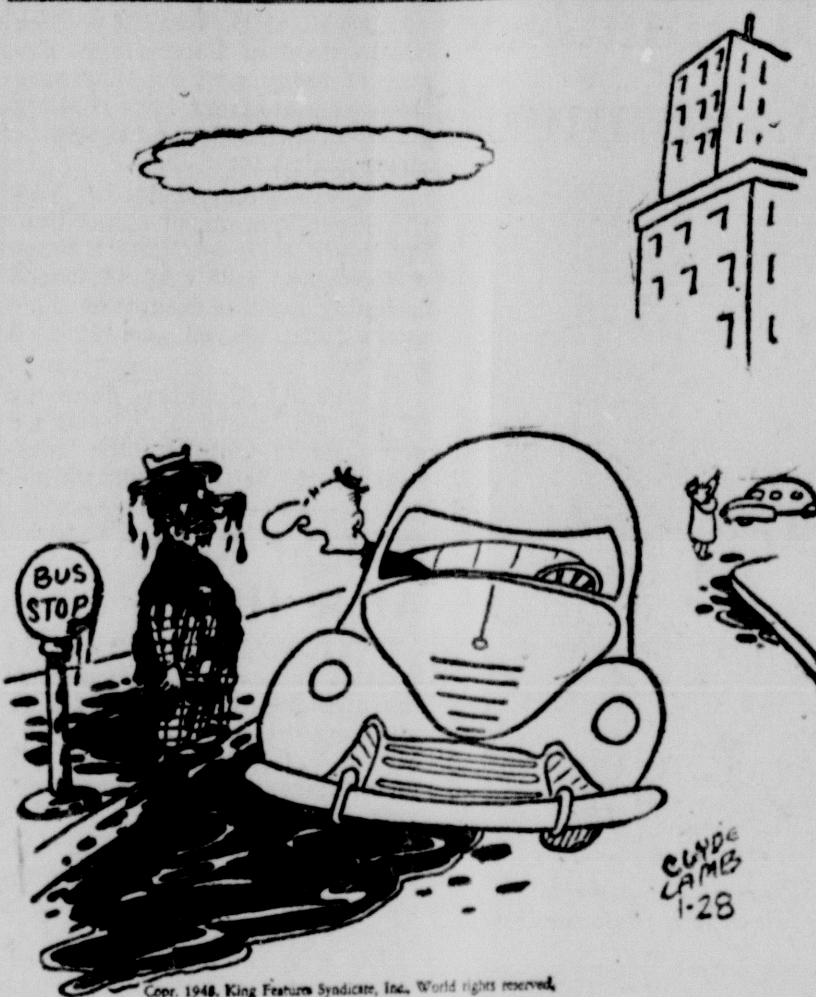

"... This is my commandment: That ye love one another, as I have loved you. Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."

And also, He said:
"Ye have heard that it hath been said, 'Thou shalt love thy neighbor, and hate thine enemy.' But I say unto you, 'Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you.'"

But few of those, Christians some of them call themselves, pay heed to this counsel. They fret and fume over school lunches and who shall get them out of the taxpayer's money, but they do not worry about the poison that is daily being poured into the minds of their own children, poisons that have already produced an unmeasurable debasement of man in Europe and projects here a society that knows no better guide than the rule of reason and necessity, the passion for self-satisfaction and indulgence.

Maybe the main thing the so-called "teen-agers" need is a sensible name.

DIET AND HEALTH

Correct Diet of Mother-to-Be Reduces Later Complications

B. HERMAN N. BUNDESEN, M.D.

DURING the past 25 years, research has established beyond all doubt that good health requires good food to maintain it. Quite literally, the body benefits in a thousand ways by a well-balanced diet. Only recently, however, have we come to realize what this kind of eating may mean to the expectant mother and her unborn child. Recent scientific studies show that the diet of women even prior to pregnancy is important to the health of their children. If this is so, it is easy to understand the great necessity of maintaining nutrition throughout the all-important months during which the child is being formed.

Various Substances

Today we have definite evidence on this score. It shows that lack of various substances found in food—vitamins, minerals and proteins—over a long period of time, may interfere with proper development before birth, thus producing defects in the baby, hinder breast feeding, afterwards, and so lead to disease. In the last 35 years, the death rate among infants under one year of age has been reduced by 82 per cent. That is a record of which we may all be proud and yet, in this same period of time, the number of babies who die at birth or within the first 30 days of life has dropped only 1.8 per cent. In other words, all our marvelous progress in saving babies has occurred in the one month to one year period. Today, many doctors feel that the newer knowledge of nutrition has given us the clue to an equal accomplishment in safeguarding the very beginning of life.

Experiments Carried Out

Many experiments have been carried out to show the part played by diet in the health of the mother-to-be and her baby. For example, a study was made on more than 5000 mothers. Half of them were given a dietary supplement containing vitamins and minerals. Those women who received these supplements had fewer babies born before the normal time. Furthermore, there was a decrease in the number of infant deaths and stillbirths. Good nutrition is also important in aiding in the mother's recovery after the birth of the baby, as well as in her ability to nurse her baby and, of course, no food has ever been found so satisfactory for a baby as breast milk.

Better Nutrition

Thus, it would seem that better nutrition of the mother-to-be would result in fewer stillbirths, fewer cases of anemia, toxemia or poisoning, and reduced infant mortality. Many figures have been collected which seem to show that about one-third of the people in the United States are underfed. One reason, of course, is lack of money to buy enough food, but another, which affects a great many more people, is lack of knowledge as to the right foods to buy, even where money is no consideration. In view of this, the expectant mother has no greater duty towards herself and her child than to consult her physician as soon as possible to make sure that she is eating the proper diet throughout her pregnancy.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

A. S.: Will you please tell me why my six-year-old child grinds his teeth while he is asleep at night?

Answer: Grinding the teeth is a sign of nervousness, and the treatment of it consists in proper hygiene.

The child should sleep a sufficient number of hours in a quiet room, with enough covers over him. He should not be fed or given anything to drink during the night. The diet for such a child should consist of plenty of green vegetables and fresh fruits.

CHAPTER TWENTY-FIVE

THE SHERIFF was cowed by Francine's fury. Not so Officer Cuchinello. Cuchinello was provoked to anger. They had plenty of grounds to make a search. But plenty. "Maybe you'd like to take a look at this."

He produced a snow-soaked ball of paper from his pocket. He straightened the ball out with dexterous fingers and the folds of a handkerchief. It was an oversize envelope, crumpled and stained with smears of blood.

Catherine looked at it, and her breath caught. Francine looked at the envelope and then at Catherine. Catherine nodded. She couldn't speak. She was back in the dreadful stillness of Mike's living room in the apartment on Fifty-ninth Street, with Mike slumped across the desk and bands of wet redness spreading over the heavy cap of his silver hair, wet redness in crisscrosses and bands that had trickled sluggishly to the envelope on the desk at his elbow, the envelope in Cuchinello's hands. The stains on it, fading now, were Mike's life blood. The envelope had bulged then. It was empty now.

Even Francine was stopped. She gazed at the envelope fascinatedly. Her skin had a greenish tinge to it. "Where was that found, officer?"

"Down there," Cuchinello was gratified at the effect he had produced. He waved toward the windows. "It was lying in the snow near some bushes below the windows of this room."

He went on to explain that the crumpled ball of paper had been found by another officer on a patrol of the grounds earlier that morning. "Maybe," Cuchinello conceded handsomely, "Miss Lister didn't throw it there. Anyone on this floor could have done it. A door from the hall leads out to the veranda and a lot of these rooms open on it. We were talking to Inspector McKee in New York and he gave us the set-up, so we came here first."

Francine's pallor didn't get any better. Her throat seemed to be dry. She had to clear it before she said, helplessly, "I don't see, with two or three bedrooms available—and plenty of matches and ash trays, why anyone would have disposed of the envelope in that fashion, by simply throwing it away."

Cuchinello shrugged. "People with the jitters do funny things sometimes. That's how they get caught."

Attracted by the open door, the sound of voices, the others began to come into the room then. Tom came first. He listened to Francine and stared at the envelope spread out on the table, his big handsome face dark, his gaze disordered. He ran a hand through his hair, pulled at his tie. His fashionable patients and adoring nurses wouldn't have recognized his ordinarily mellifluous voice.

"Good Lord, the bonds!" he exclaimed harshly. "Where are they? If it's true they were in that envelope, someone in this place has them. . . . They've got to be found."

Nicky came in on Tom's heels. He was equally startled. His concern was for Catherine. "To heck with the bonds! Why are they picking on you?" He put an arm around her shoulders, eyed the Sheriff and Officer Cuchinello with angry disdain. Like Francine, he could be cutting. Catherine's heart warmed at his championship. Then she and Stephen Darrell sauntered along the hall, paused and came in.

Everyone talked at once. Innocence was implicit in their questions, their shrugs, their cries and exclamations. "I know nothing about the envelope or the bonds it contained." They all said that without saying it in words. There was something else. Another emotion had been added. It was new—and ugly. They were suspicious of one another. Up until then they had stood shoulder to shoulder. The envelope exploded their solidarity, made them turn and peer at each other fearfully, exploringly. You could feel the mutual suspicion like water rising in the bottom of a boat, slow, heavy, menacing. They were no longer a family, brother and sister, husband or wife, friend and friend; they were antagonists, fighting for survival. It was Mike's murderer who had removed the bonds from his desk in the apartment on Fifty-ninth Street. "Was it you? Was it you? Was it you?" The unspoken demand, the voiceless conjecture, the sidelong glances darkened the light and poisoned the air.

Only by the finding of the bonds could they be individually released. Cuchinello pointed that out. He was capable and downright. The bonds had been carried up here from New York. It wasn't likely that anyone would tote an incriminating empty envelope around. They were from New York. The bonds were missing. Every one of them would have to be searched. Their rooms and the cars they came in would have to be searched.

"They agreed in concert, with no perceptible hesitation. The Sheriff and Cuchinello discussed ways and means. If the men would proceed to an empty bedroom in the other wing, and the ladies—with the exception of Catherine, whose room and person had been given a clean bill of health—would go to a vacant bedroom in this wing? Mrs. Muir would be pressed into service to search the ladies, if they were willing? Of course, Cuchinello said, they could stand on their rights. But in their own interests. . . .

"Yes," Tom slapped a balled fist sharply into an open palm. "I demand a search."

On the far side of the room, holding a match to Francine's cigarette, to Hat's, Stephen Darrell said quietly, "We all want one, old man—and the sooner we begin. . . ."

He had looked at Catherine, once, when he first came in. She had glanced away, but there wasn't a moment when she wasn't conscious of him, moving about at the fringe of various groups, aloof, almost disinterested, his head bent, his hands in his pockets, pausing to toe the carpet, to listen to the two officials.

Angela was the only one who hadn't put in an appearance. Tom and Francine and Hat were apprehensive about the effect this new development would have on her. Accompanied by the Sheriff, no one was going to be permitted to be alone for a minute until the search had been made. They went to tell Angela what had happened.

Nicky was on the floor beside Catherine, his shoulder against her knee. Stephen and Cuchinello were waiting for him. He got up reluctantly. He didn't want to go. "I hate to leave you, Catherine. You look all in." He stooped and put his lips to her forehead. "I won't be long. Wait for me here." She said she'd wait downstairs, and he said, "All right, then we'll go some place where we can talk," and followed the other two men out of the room.

To talk was the last thing in the world Catherine wanted. What would be the use of it? She sat on in the little rocker, tight hands clasping a crossed knee. Obviously Mrs. Muir and her few boarders had nothing to do with the appearance of the blood-stained envelope. The State trooper had carried tenderly off with him. No, there was no getting away from it. The man or woman hiding behind the blue-brocade curtains in Mike's studio when she went in and found him dead had brought the envelope and the bonds up here. They were hidden somewhere in the boarding house. They would be found. Would it be on one of them? She brought her palms together softly, let them fall and jumped to her feet. Not one of them—it was impossible. There had to be some other explanation.

Repeating that firmly gave her a sort of fugitive strength. She went into the bathroom and threw cold water on her hot face. Francine and Tom's room was on the other side. Someone was in the room. A policeman? It was. She heard Francine say drily, "Would you mind being careful with that perfume bottle? You won't find anything in it, and it's the last of my Number 7." A door closed.

Catherine wandered back into her bedroom and busied herself, brushing her skirt, straightening it, pulling out loose threads. Her stockings were hopeless. She redded her lips, ran a comb through her hair, laid the comb down and looked into the greenish depths of the mirror. Her face looked back at her, a little white and with faint bluish stains under the eyes—but that was all. It was just like any one else's. Unfeminine. There was no use scrutinizing people's faces; they wouldn't tell you anything.

Where among them, those six others, lay the will, the capacity, for murder? She tried to survey them objectively. Tom, Doctor Thomas La Mott, rising young surgeon, successful but not as successful as he wanted to be, whom she had known since he was a boy, always beautifully brushed and combed, with his face washed and his clothes and his emotions equally in order—except for one thing. When pushed far enough he exploded. It was a sort of spontaneous combustion. His fits of rage were rare. When they came, they were frightening. At one moment he would be his handsome, somewhat stolid little Red Fauntleroy self, at the next, his face would be convulsed, crimson, and he would be shouting.

THE LONG RUN COUNTS

PROBABILITIES are good things to depend on. What occurs some one time is of no importance compared to over-all results in the long run. In fact, probabilities are the result of the cumulative events of both favorable and unfavorable nature. So no matter what kind of disaster may befall you through observing them during one particular deal, don't let it upset your dependence upon them the next time a similar situation presents itself.

First, look at the trumps. With nine, probabilities would indicate one probable losing trick. In hearts, the probabilities were for one loser only—if either the K or Q happened to be with West. One loser in clubs is certain. Hence the making of game seems to depend entirely on whether or not the diamond finesse will work. There is pretty close to an even chance it will, only slightly less because of East opening the bidding. So the soundness of the contract seems assured, as it apparently depends upon an almost-even-chance finesse.

But this time everything went wrong. The second club lead was ruffed by declarer, the diamond Q sent through to the K, the spade K won by the A, the heart J finessed to the K, the spade Q, J and 10 scored to make South

Now let's not comment particularly on that bidding, as it is merely faked in, with a plea for its soundness. Just how South got into 4-Spades was not reported by Joe A. Chilsen, ace newspaperman of Merrill, Wisconsin, whose Merrill Daily Herald is rated as highly as his own good game of bridge. Without looking at the East and West hands, let's merely figure out whether that contract appears sound.

Fear Fireworks May Develop At CIO-Policy Draft Confab | Small Nation Group Opposing Ban on Export-Import Quotas

Special to Central Press

WASHINGTON—A real blow-up may develop when the CIO executive board and its Political Action Committee meets in Washington late this month to draft the CIO national policy.

Henry Wallace's presidential candidacy is the reason. Wallace's third party move has widened the breach between right-wing and left-wing within the CIO. Some of the left-wing CIO affiliates, such as the longshoremen, the smelter and packing house workers—favor his candidacy. However, right-wing CIO groups are dead set against the former vice president and many have pulled out of the American Labor Party because that organization endorsed him.

CIO President Phil Murray has already rapped the knuckles of both pro-Wallace and anti-Wallace groups for announcing their positions. He demanded they keep silent until the national policy of the CIO is laid down. Drafting that policy, incidentally, may provide some fireworks.

● MARSHALL PLAN TROUBLES?—Some observers see a new threat to the Marshall Plan in a development in Havana that has, for the most part, gone unnoticed. There the nations which drafted the International Trade Charter at Geneva are seeking an agreement to reduce tariff barriers.

Quietly and without much publicity in the United States, some of the smaller powers which are not self-sufficient have been obstinately opposing a suggested ban on export and import quotas. These nations are led by Argentina and include such distant states as Pakistan.

There have been hints that, if the opposition bloc sticks to its position, the conference will break up with little success.

Aside from its immediate significance, failure to establish the ban on export-import quotas would diminish the ability of the Marshall planners to set up a workable program for the economic rehabilitation of Europe.

For example, the Plan provides for the purchase of many things in countries outside the United States. Export quotas could be used to limit these purchases to the United States or other overburdened areas. They could even be used to force higher prices.

Moreover, the Plan calls for the sale of substantial export goods from Europe to these smaller countries. Import quotas could hamper that. Congressional opponents of the Marshall Plan may soon be making capital of these clouds on the horizon.

● TRUMAN AND TAFT AGREE!—President Truman and Senator Robert A. Taft, a leading GOP presidential aspirant, see eye-to-eye on at least one thing—the need for a secretary of welfare in the cabinet.

The president in his state of the union message, urged Congress to enact legislation creating the new job. And Taft is the author of a bill that would do just that, which is now before the Senate labor committee.

Inside information has it, however, that nothing will be done about the bill this session, despite its backing by both parties.

The reason: If it were approved within the next few months, President Truman would select the first secretary of welfare. Republicans feel sure he would pick a Democrat.

Golden Anniversary Celebrated By Order Of Eastern Star

275 Persons Attend Rites

Circleville chapter, Order of Eastern Star, celebrated its 50th anniversary Tuesday evening with 275 persons being present for the ceremonies in the chapter room of Masonic temple. Crown chapter from Columbus instituted the local order on January 11, 1898.

The local chapter instituted the M. Z. Kreider chapter in Lancaster on Dec. 9, 1901; Kingston chapter, Feb. 14, 1919; and Concord chapter in Frankfort on July 19, 1929.

The Rev. Elisha Kneisley, pastor of First Methodist church, offered the invocation. Presentation of the American flag and welcome was by Mrs. Robert Goodchild, worthy matron, and Oscar J. Ward, worthy patron. Guests composed of grand officers from other orders along with chapter members of the district were introduced.

A vocal solo was given by Mrs. Ralph Hosler and an organ solo by Mrs. Ervin Leist. "Brief History Of Our Fifty Years" was presented by Mrs. Edwin S. Shane.

Sextet composed of Mrs. Harold S. Defenbaugh, Mrs. Don Collins, Mrs. Robert Bowser, Mrs. C. E. Wells, Mrs. Ralph Dunkel and Mrs. Chester Noecker sang two selections.

Earl Hilyard, Vernon Blake, Carl Hohenstein and J. Sam Morris, members of the "barbershop" quartet, offered various vocal numbers.

A playlet "How The Story Grew" was enacted by Mrs. George H. Adkins, Miss Reba Lee, Mrs. Harry Griner, Mrs. Carl Bennett, Mrs. Cecil Noecker, Mrs. Karl Johnson, Mrs. John Magill, and Mrs. Dick Robinson. Miss Lee was director. Mrs. Kenneth Robbins sang a solo and the group joined to sing "Auld Lang Syne."

The chapter room was beautifully decorated in greenery, baskets of pom-pom chrysanthemums and gold-colored calla lilies.

A social hour was spent in the Red room where refreshments were served. Miss Gladys Thomas, past grand matron, presided at the gold and white appointed tea table. A three-tiered cake centered the table surrounded by 50 gold tapers and gold stars placed at strategic points over the cloth.

Mrs. E. S. Neuding charter member, who was matron in 1905, associate conductress in 1898, and deputy grand matron in 1911 was presented a gift from the local chapter in honor of her achievements. Mrs. Emma Fox, another charter member, also was present.

Miss Marie L. Hamilton was chairman of the anniversary program. Assisting her were Mrs. C. D. Bennett, Mrs. Lawrence J. Johnson, Mrs. T. R. Acord, Mrs. Cecil Noecker, Mrs. Emmett W. Springfield Lady Lost 30 Lbs. Husband Well Pleased

"I have lost 30 lbs. while taking Renel Concentrate," writes Mrs. Wm. Walke, 1616 Calawa Ave., Springfield 2, Ohio. "I feel like a new person and always keep an extra bottle of Renel handy for it is my faithful stand-by. I would never want to try anything else. I am 43 years of age and my husband and my friends say I look much younger now I am so slim."

Hundreds of others have obtained similar relief from the social and physical discomfort of being overweight. Renel is the original grapefruit juice recipe for taking off ugly fat. It's simple. Just go to your druggist and ask for 4 ounces of liquid Renel. Pour the contents into a pint bottle—add enough grapefruit juice to fill the bottle. Then

TB Group Has Parley

Mrs. Florence L. Fogle, health coordinator and representative of the Kellogg foundation, addressed members of the executive board of Pickaway County Tuberculosis and Health Association Tuesday afternoon.

George D. McDowell, president, was in charge of the session, as members heard Mrs. Fogle speak on "Health Education Programs". The meeting took place in Dr. A. D. Blackburn's office in the courthouse. Mrs. C. E. Webb, executive-secretary, reported the 1947 seal sale had netted $3,242.03 to date in Pick-away County and Circleville. The goal was $3,500.

Mrs. Melvin Yates, Dr. Blackburn and H. A. Strous were appointed by McDowell to serve on the budget committee. McDowell named Miss Clara Southward, Mrs. Webb and Mrs. Yates to prepare a slate of officers to be voted upon at the annual April meeting. The group discussed mass x-rays and health programs for future health projects here.

UN Force Would End War, Claim

Agency Proposes Holy Land Idea

LAKE SUCCESS, N. Y., Jan. 28.—The United Nations has been advised by the official Jewish Agency that a small and mobile international "token" force would suffice to end the bloodshed in Palestine.

Moshe Shertok, head of the agency's political department and its spokesman at UN, presented this viewpoint to the five-power Palestine commission at his latest and second appearance before that body.

He claimed that appearance of even a "token" UN force, equipped with heavy aircraft and artillery, would have such a salutary effect on Arab morale that most of the fighting would cease.

The Jewish Agency spokesman maintained that the Haganah (Jewish defense force) is willing to shoulder the major burden of warding off Arab attacks which may develop against the projected Jewish state.

HE REQUESTED the Palestine commission to authorize the supplying of arms to the Jewish forces and to permit the establishment of a Jewish militia.

Shertok said that the British would "not raise insuperable obstacles to the arming of Haganah" and that cognizance has been taken several times of the existence of that fighting group and its military supplies.

Shertok touched on a problem close to the hearts of "the five lonely pilgrims" comprising the commission.

He assured them that bodily protection was available and possible, particularly in Jerusalem "which is a large city and has many safe areas."

But Shertok added an ominous note in saying:

"The commission can travel by armored car, if necessary. But such travel around the country might not be advisable. Longer distances will have to be covered by air."

Shakeup Seen For Cop Force

COLUMBUS, Jan. 28 — Safety Director C. C. Cole is to meet today with "all commanding officers" of the Columbus police department following the resignation of Chief Lester W. Merica, effective March 1.

The afternoon meeting at police headquarters was called in the department's daily bulletin. It included all officers from sergeants to captains and was interpreted as an indication that a reorganization of the police department was imminent.

However, observers believed there was no direct connection between Merica's resignation submitted yesterday and the reorganization. Instead, it was believed the resignation simply offered a good opportunity for a reshuffling of personnel.

Man Hunts Tones And Mushrooms

AGATE BEACH, Ore., Jan. 27 —While three concerts of his works were being played in New York recently, internationally-known composer Ernest Bloch was hunting new tonal themes — and mushrooms — in the damp forests along the Oregon coast.

If a tonal idea trips through his mind in the silence of the woods, Bloch, who knows and loves mushrooms, will pause long enough to jot it down on a pocket sketch pad he always carries.

Sixty-seven years since he was born in Switzerland plus a jumpy stomach and nerves have convinced the composer that he wants a peaceful place to work.

He composes leisurely and is now working on an important piano-orchestra work. Innumerable sketches precede the final form. "Israel" took four years. He wrote "Schelomo" in three weeks, but the Hebrew melodies had been in his head for years.

Bloch composes on a Steinway grand littered with sheets of music.

New Chemical Said Isolated

CHICAGO, Jan. 28—University of Chicago scientists report they have isolated a new chemical substance they believe may solve the process by which trees and plants convert air and water into starch and other food substances.

The researchers said that the process—known as photosynthesis—had been partially solved through the use of new radioactive compounds generated in atomic energy furnaces.

Scientists have contended that the solution to the photosynthesis process would enable laboratory technicians to produce grain and other harvests in their workshops. The ultimate result would eliminate the necessity for tilling the soil for the harvests.

Local Pelt Take Far Off Par

The volume of fur pelts purchased in Pickaway County is off at least 50 percent this year compared to a similar period last year, according to H. M. Gordon, Circleville pelt dealer.

Asked whether the shortage was caused by lack of inexperienced trappers, Gordon said, "No, I don't believe so."

"We have a number of men in the county who have trapped this part of the country for many years with good results. They all put the blame on the high Spring floods which drowned the young muskrats in their holes."

"Many of the local trappers came to me early in the Fall and predicted the decrease, so they must have known what they were talking about."

Man Dies In Freak Mishap

CLEVELAND, Jan. 28 — Captain Thomas Rainsford, 67, Detroit inventor, was reported in good condition today in Charity hospital after being injured in a freak accident yesterday which killed one man and injured another.

Vincent Patton, 42, of Cleveland, was killed immediately when an automatic transmission he was testing exploded. Rainsford and Raymond E. Aust, 37, of suburban Fairview, were watching the trial run.

The automatic gearshift, installed on a Packard engine, achieved a smooth climb to 40 miles an hour in four seconds when the fly-wheel and housing suddenly blew up.

DO YOU WANT THIS FOR YOUR POSTWAR PRICE EXPERIENCE?

THROUGH THEIR FARM BUREAU farmers are fighting their battles for stable prices.

Much depends upon the action of Congress in the coming year. Farmers must win the support of the public in order to gain the necessary support in Congress.

Only organized farmers can do this.

HOW MUCH CAN YOU DO ALONE?

IT IS OUR JOB to show that agricultural prosperity is the foundation for a lasting national prosperity.

Farmers make up less than one quarter of the population. U. S. census figures reveal that the income of one-half the people depends upon prices farmers get!

The farmer is the best all-around customer for American industry. He buys more steel every year than does any major industry, more cement than all highway systems combined, and so on.

Farmers must establish a balance between what they get and what they pay, so that a farmer will earn as much income from the work he does as a man with comparable skills and abilities earns in town.

YOU CAN HELP YOURSELF by joining the Farm Bureau, or by continuing your membership. More than 1,250,000 families are members in 46 states. More than 50,000 farmers are members in Ohio.

Biased Politicians Seek To Judge Objectively

By KENNETH L. DIXON

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—The Army officer on the phone was an old personal friend whom this correspondent had known both in war and peace. Nevertheless, he sounded a bit upset.

"Before I answer your questions," he said, "tell me whether you want me to speak as a private citizen or as an Army officer."

"What difference does it make?" I countered. "I want your honest opinion on the deal—as well as what detailed facts you have available."

"Well, if I answer it as a private citizen, I guess it's all right," he laughed uneasily. "But if I answer you as an Army officer, then I'm 'putting out propaganda,' so they say."

HIS INDIVIDUAL attitude may have been a bit overdrawn and incongruous, but it still gives an idea as to the terrific job facing Indiana's Republican Congressman Forest A. Harness in the program he has outlined for his special subcommittee on federal publicity and propaganda.

An offshoot of the house committee on expenditures, the group has been investigating various federal agencies which, Harness says, have been spending more than $75,000,000 annually in publicity and propaganda work.

"But the tangible cost, large as it is, should be the least of our concern," Harness said in a speech on the house floor yesterday.

He charged that, "in defiance of law," these agencies were carrying on the most powerful and persistent of all lobbies—for the purpose of perpetuating and extending their own powers.

He said that these groups seek to "sell" ideas to the public, at the public's expense, with the result that pressure groups often are formed across the country which, in turn, seek to influence Congress for or against certain legislation.

Then he pledged that his committee would continue to explore and expose "the whole system and theory of government-made public opinion."

Simultaneously, he stressed that the committee would not seek to persecute the "legitimate publicity functions" of federal agencies. These legitimate functions, he divided roughly into two classes:

(1) Administrative officials at "policy-making levels" should be entirely free to express and discuss policy on any issue, but (2) remainder of the agency's employees and activities should be confined to the issuance of "factual, objective and studiously unbiased information."

NOW IT IS doubtful if any people across the country would disagree either with the congressmen's general definitions of publicity and propaganda, or with his views on the dangers inherent in what he terms "federally-inspired thought control campaigns."

But it is equally doubtful if any average two voters of divergent political views could agree or how to apply those definitions in practice—and that's what is going to make a terrifically tough job!

For instance, take that phrase "factual, objective and studiously unbiased information." Now newspapermen have been hunting that Holy Grail for centuries, and the average veteran reporter today concedes that true objectivity is like perfection—always to be sought after but never quite achieved.

How, then, can congressmen, politically trained from the start to be biased in favor of one party or the other, honestly set themselves up to judge objectivity in federal publicity functions?

For example: It has been many months since the last session, and it might seem that the amount of money then trimmed from the national budget would be a matter of arithmetic—and thus a fairly objective fact.

But, lo, after all this time, the most brilliant Democratic and Republican minds can not agree on how much money was saved.

Visa Probe Promised

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—Rep. McDowell (R) Pa., disclosed today that he intends to launch an extensive probe into alleged lax immigration precautions which permit dangerous political and criminal aliens to cross U. S. borders unchecked.

McDowell, chairman of the House unAmerican Activities subcommittee on Fascism, declared that his investigation of the illegal entry of Ferenc Vajta, former diplomat for the Hungarian wartime Fascist government, has emphasized the need for a full-scale investigation of border policing.

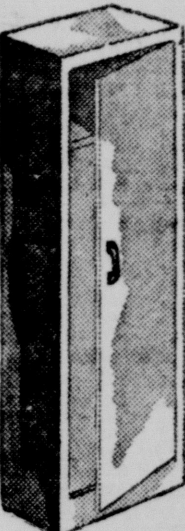

Vajta, who served as consul for the Hungarian government in Vienna during the German occupation, was arrested in Washington by Justice department officials this month. McDowell's investigation revealed he had no passport but was granted a visa in Madrid.

Black Market Check Ordered

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—Assistant Army Secretary Gordon Gray said today that the duties of Orville J. Taylor in Germany will include investigation of reported American activity on the black market.

Taylor, a Chicago attorney, was named to succeed Judge E. Earle Rives, of Greensboro, N. C., as a special assistant to Army Secretary Royall. Rives served only a few weeks in Germany before his wife's sickness forced his return to the United States.

When Rives was appointed he was instructed specifically to survey war crimes trials and denazification procedures. However, soon after his departure for Germany Royall asked him to include a check of German black market activities in his work.

Mrs. Seymour Miller is much improved after becoming seriously ill Saturday night.

Considerable damage was done to the automobile owned by James Dummitt Thursday when it reportedly was forced from the road near Columbus on Lockbourne road by a bus.

Election of officers for the year featured the business meeting of the Ashville Community Club Monday evening when the following officers were elected: president, Guy Cline; vice-president, Charles Trone Jr.; secretary, Edwin Irwin; treasurer, Frank Tedrow; trustees, E. F. Schlegel, E. W. Seeds, H. J. Bowers, William S. Fischer, and Roy S. Hedges. The club voted to contribute $200 to the Band Booster Club which furnished the dinner for the club. Among other business considered was how much aid the club could be in establishing a movie in Ashville and preliminary discussion of the annual July Fourth celebration. Charles Trone will be in charge of the next dinner meeting.

Eight grade honor students with an average grade of "B" or better for the past six weeks were Anne Kraft, Ralph Frye, Dick Fudge, and James Wheeler.

Mrs. George D. McDowell returned home Monday from visiting with her mother, Mrs. Robert Finch at Carmi, Ill.

Then he pledged that his committee would continue to explore and expose "the whole system and theory of government-made public opinion."

Simultaneously, he stressed that the committee would not seek to persecute the "legitimate publicity functions" of federal agencies. These legitimate functions, he divided roughly into two classes:

- (1) Administrative officials at "policy-making levels" should be entirely free to express and discuss policy on any issue, but
- (2) remainder of the agency's employees and activities should be confined to the issuance of "factual, objective and studiously unbiased information."

NOW IT IS doubtful if any people across the country would disagree either with the congressman's general definitions of publicity and propaganda, or with his views on the dangers inherent in what he terms "federally-inspired thought control campaigns."

But it is equally doubtful if any average two voters of divergent political views could agree or how to apply those definitions in practice—and that's what is going to make a terrifically tough job!

For instance, take that phrase "factual, objective and studiously unbiased information." Now newspapermen have been hunting that Holy Grail for centuries, and the average veteran reporter today concedes that true objectivity is like perfection—always to be sought after but never quite achieved.

How, then, can congressmen, politically trained from the start to be biased in favor of one party or the other, honestly set themselves up to judge objectively in federal publicity functions?

For example: It has been many months since the last session, and it might seem that the amount of money then trimmed from the national budget would be a matter of arithmetic—and thus a fairly objective fact.

But, lo, after all this time, the most brilliant Democratic and Republican minds can not agree on how much money was saved.

Visa Probe Promised

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28—Rep. McDowell (R) Pa., disclosed today that he intends to launch an extensive probe into alleged lax immigration precautions which permit dangerous political and criminal aliens to cross U. S. borders unchecked.

McDowell, chairman of the House unAmerican Activities subcommittee on Fascism, declared that his investigation of the illegal entry of Ferenc Vajta, former diplomat for the Hungarian wartime Fascist government, has emphasized the need for a full-scale investigation of border policing.

Vajta, who served as consul for the Hungarian government in Vienna during the German occupation, was arrested in Washington by Justice department officials this month. McDowell's investigation revealed he had no passport but was granted a visa in Madrid.

Black Market Check Ordered

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28—Assistant Army Secretary Gordon Gray said today that the duties of Orville J. Taylor in Germany will include investigation of reported American activity on the black market.

Taylor, a Chicago attorney, was named to succeed Judge E. Earle Rives, of Greensboro, N. C., as a special assistant to Army Secretary Royall. Rives served only a few weeks in Germany before his wife's sickness forced his return to the United States.

When Rives was appointed he was instructed specifically to survey war crimes trials and denazification procedures. However, soon after his departure for Germany Royall asked him to include a check of German black market activities in his work.

Chamber Hits Budget Plan

COLUMBUS, Jan. 28—The Ohio Chamber of Commerce assailed President Truman's budget and tax program today as inflationary and extravagant.

The statement was based on an analysis by C. D. Laylin, of Columbus, general counsel of the Chamber, and E. M. Elkin, of Pittsburgh, chairman of the National Association of State Chambers of Commerce.

It charged that the President's program would "add billions of dollars to the already dangerously high federal expenditures and set in motion another round of price increases."

Ashville

Mrs. Seymour Millar is much improved after becoming seriously ill Saturday night.

Considerable damage was done to the automobile owned by James Dummitt Thursday when it reportedly was forced from the road near Columbus on Lockbourne road by a bus.

Election of officers for the year featured the business meeting of the Ashville Community Club Monday evening when the following officers were elected: president, Guy Cline; vice-president, Charles Trone Jr.; secretary, Edwin Irwin; treasurer, Frank Tedrow; trustees, E. F. Schlegel, E. W. Seeds, H. J. Bowers, William S. Fischer, and Roy S. Hedges. The club voted to contribute $200 to the Band Booster Club which furnished the dinner for the club. Among other business considered was how much aid the club could be in establishing a movie in Ashville and preliminary discussion of the annual July Fourth celebration. Charles Trone will be in charge of the next dinner meeting.

Eighth grade honor students with an average grade of "B" or better for the past six weeks were Anne Kraft, Ralph Frye, Dick Fudge, and James Wheeler.

Mrs. George D. McDowell returned home Monday from visiting with her mother, Mrs. Robert Finch at Carmi, Ill.

Members of Palmetto Lodge are reminded of the regular semi-monthly meeting of the lodge to be held Wednesday at 7:30 p. m. Charles Trone Jr. is chancellor commander.

Pro Cagers Set Yearly Playoff

WHEELING, W. V. A., Jan. 28—The All-America Basketball League will complete its season with a Shaughnessy play-off beginning March 31.

The league underwent a reorganization yesterday, electing Joe Donnelly of Columbus president. Donnelly said six clubs—Wheeling, Columbus, Altoona, Zanesville, Cumberland and a Youngstown—will finish the season. Four teams will take part in the playoff.

Robert Colville, a committee member, said he would bring the subject up before the other

4 Tilts Booked For Friday In County League

Four Pickaway County basketball games are scheduled for Friday night in the Pickaway County basketball league.

Walnut, fourth place team in the league, will travel to Ashville. The Broncos tied for first place in the league with no losses so far this season.

Fifth place New Holland will have better pickings when they meet third place Salt-creek bunch. But if past performances mean anything, Saltcreek may find themselves on the short end of the straw.

New Holland has in the past, accepted the position of grader for the league, knocking the tougher teams out of the higher brackets.

Third game on the schedule will be at Scioto, when the seventh place Perry crew will try to hold on to their berth by defeating the eighth place Scioto lads.

Darby will travel to Monroe for the last game scheduled Friday night. Both teams are in the cellar portion of the league.

Darby is at rock-bottom last place, with the Monroe lads holding ninth place in the 11 team league.

Pickaway and Deercreek have no games scheduled for Friday evening.

Indians Join Chase For Lad
CLEVELAND, Jan. 28—The Cleveland Indians today joined in the chase for George Zoeterman, 17-year-old Chicago school-boy hurler.

Rudy Schaffer, Tribe business manager, said the Tribe will be among the six clubs which already have expressed a desire to sign the Christian high star.

Washington Township High School Reopening Sought

Group Hits Facilities In Circleville

Noon Building Lockup Claimed

Declaring that Circleville high school "isn't giving our children the break they deserve," a group of Washington township parents are campaigning for the reopening of Washington high school.

The school, closed with the 1946-47 school year, was discontinued at the request of the Washington township board of education.

Robert Brobst, Washington township resident, said Wednesday a "large delegation" would appear before the board of education at 8 p. m. Friday in Washington school building to press their demands.

Brobst said "our children do not want to go to the town school anymore."

HE SAID that about eight youngsters, who "would have gone to Washington if the school were open," have quit classes since the township students had been transferred to the Circleville system.

He estimated that 40 high school age students were involved.

Sharpest criticism of the Circleville system was treatment of students at the noon hour.

"The town folks lock up the building for an hour at noon and our children have nothing to do but roam the streets," Brobst declared. He added:

"There is no place for them to eat their lunches in the town school building and they have to buy their meals in restaurants."

Claim that Circleville schools provide no place for country students to eat prepared lunches was quickly denied by Frank Fischer, superintendent of city schools.

HE SAID a room has been assigned to the 80-odd country pupils who attend the local high school. This room is under the supervision of a high school teacher.

Fischer said the school has a rule which states that if a student leaves the building during the noon hour, he shall remain away from the building until the city students return for afternoon classes.

Brobst said that "even if we did have a small school out here, we were able to provide our children with warm noon lunches."

Some parents complained that since their children were transferred to "the town school," the youngsters "have taken up smoking and loafing around in undesirable places because they have no where else to go" during the period when the Circleville high school building is closed.

One parent declared that Washington township boys had no opportunity to engage in sports since they "have to catch the bus" before city athletic events and practices take place.

Fischer commented that boys who eat lunches in the high school building are permitted to go to the gymnasium for play while they await resumption of afternoon classes. They are handicapped, he admitted, if they desire to compete for positions on varsity high school athletic teams since practice sessions

Eddy Urges U. S. Clean Up Own House

COLUMBUS, Jan. 28—Approximately 2,000 ministers attending the Ohio Pastors' Convention here heard a suggestion last night that America clean up its own house before taking on Europe.

While approving the Marshall Plan, Dr. Sherwood Eddy, veteran Far East missionary, said America first should provide "economic justice for all and racial brotherhood."

Eddy also maintained there should be no appeasement of Stalin as there was of Hitler and that we should reach some sort of an "overall agreement with Russia on Germany and China. Earlier in the day, 800 delegates went on record as opposing universal military training, with only one dissenting vote. Their opposition was stated in a resolution against "any type of compulsory military training."

Discussions are held during after-school hours.

ARTHUR Leist, president of the Washington township board of education, said that he expected a delegation at Friday's meeting but that he could not "make any prediction what action the board would take, if any."

Leist explained that the board of education originally voted to disband the high school because of the small number of students and because the board felt consolidation "would be to the best advantage of the children."

He said the township's children were charged nothing in the way of tuition for attending Circleville high school. The township pays the transportation bill for taking students to and from school.

Leist declared that "there never have been more than eight graduates from Washington high school and there were only three last year."

Superintendent Fischer said the local system had neither cafeteria facilities nor room for such facilities.

There is a probability, he said, that the city's new school building program would include a cafeteria. He added that such expansion probably would not come "for two or three years."

Leist declared that "there never have been more than eight graduates from Washington high school and there were only three last year."

Superintendent Fischer said the local system had neither cafeteria facilities nor room for such facilities.

There is a probability, he said, that the city's new school building program would include a cafeteria. He added that such expansion probably would not come "for two or three years."

A Navy submarine, the only seagoing craft which provides a stable platform, is helping American scientists make accurate gravity measurements at sea.

SURVIVORS of five years in concentration and detention camps, Rabbi Isaac Schwarz (right) and his wife Matywe, have their son born aboard ship within sight of the Statue of Liberty. Former Circleville Man Praised For Art Exhibit Shown In East

A new exhibit sponsored by the Rockport Art Association in Gloucester, Mass., includes water colors by John K. Mason, son of Mrs. Charles Mason, formerly of Circleville.

According to an account of the displays, "the training of an architectural draftsman peers through the overlay of picture-making in Mason's sprightly notes."

"He stays firmly on the line with the result being a very pleasant record of characteristic Rockport houses as they string along Front Beach or pile up in picturesque ells on Rockport's village streets."

Mason has had another laurel added to his list of accomplishments. He was designer of the new U. S. 3-cent postage stamp, the Frigate Constitution 1797-1947.

MASON WAS graduated by Circleville high school and served with the Armed forces overseas during World War II. Later he was employed by the government in the architectural division in camouflage projects. With his mother and sister, Miss Louise Mason, he left Circleville approximately three years ago
